Dear Mrs Marston

I must give you my most warm thanks for the volume which you have been so good as to send me. Any remembrance would be valuable of a person whom I admired so sincerely. but especially something which recalls so much what I heard from his own lips.

It must be a melancholy pleasure to you to know; that your own bitter & irreparable loss is the loss of all of us and that your husband removed from among us has left a void of deprivation among us which the present generation can never Cease to feel.

Believe me
my dear Mrs Marston

Yours most faithfully

J H Froude [FROUDE]
